City leaders, community groups come together to remember victims of violence

On Sunday, December 29, 2024, faith leaders and community organizations came together for the "Forever in our Hearts: Milwaukee Homicide Candlelight Vigil," held at Ephesians Missionary Baptist Church, 2412 N. 6th St. Family members and friends of those impacted by violence lit candles and read the names of victims in the city this past year.

Northcott Neighborhood House Executive Director Tony Kearney is one of those behind the annual event. He says it provides a space for healing, remembrance, and support for families and friends affected by senseless violence in Milwaukee.

The vigil took place after a violent few days in Milwaukee. The instances involved a six-year-old on Christmas day, and two teens who were shot and killed, and a 14-year-old was shot and injured on Dec. 28.

Milwaukee Mayor Cavalier Johnson joined other elected leaders, including US Congresswoman Gwen Moore at the vigil. Who addressed the recent violence.

On Thursday, December 26, 2024, the Wisconsin Black Historical Society, 2620 W. Center St., held the opening night Kwanzaa ceremony. Kwanzaa is an annual celebration of African American culture and heritage held from December 26 to January 1, culminating in gift-giving and a feast of faith, called Karamu Ya Imani. It celebrates the seven principles of Kwanzaa, or Nguzo Saba. The first night is Umoja (unity) which was hosted by the Wisconsin Black Historical Society; night two, Kujichagulia (self-determination), Night three, Ujima (collective work and responsibility); the fourth night, Ujamaa (cooperative economics); the fifth night, Nia (purpose); and nights six and seven Kuumba (creativity) and Imani (faith). Each night featured traditional rituals, music, dancing, poetry and local vendors selling African-themed clothing, art, food and jewelry.

Congress certifies Trump as the 2024 election winner without challenge

On Monday, , January 6, 2025, Congress certified President-elect Donald Trump as the winner of the 2024 election in proceedings that unfolded without violence or mayhem, in stark contrast to the Jan. 6, 2021, violence as a mob of Trump supporters stormed the Capitol.

Lawmakers convened under heavy security and a snowstorm to meet the date required by law to certify the election; but the legacy of Jan. 6 leaves an extraordinary fact: The candidate who tried to overturn the previous election won this time and is legitimately returning to power.

Layers of tall black fencing flank the U.S. Capitol complex in a stark reminder of what happened four years ago, when a defeated Trump sent his mob to "fight like hell" in what became the most gruesome attack on the seat of American democracy in 200 years. It was the tightest national security level possible.

Vice President Kamala Harris, presiding over proceedings as the role of the office, read the tally.

The chamber broke into applause, first Republicans for Trump, then Democrats for Harris.

The whole process happened swiftly and without unrest. One by one, the state results were read aloud by the tellers as senators and representatives sat in seats in the House chamber. Vice President-elect JD Vance joined his former colleagues. Within half an hour the process was done.

There was no violence, protests or even procedural objections in Congress this time. Republicans who challenged the 2020 election results when Trump lost to Democrat Joe Biden have no qualms this year after he defeated Harris.

Democrats frustrated by Trump's 312-226 Electoral College victory nevertheless accepted the choice of the American voters. Even the winter snow blanketing the grounds didn't interfere with Jan. 6, the day set by the Constitution to certify the vote.

Trump said in a Monday post online that Congress was certifying a "GREAT" election victory and called it "A BIG MOMENT IN HISTORY."

The day's return to a U.S. tradition that launches the peaceful transfer of presidential power comes with an asterisk as Trump prepares to take office in two weeks with a revived sense of authority. He denies that he lost four years ago, muses about staying beyond the Constitution's two-term White House limit and promises to pardon some of the more than 1,250 people who have pleaded guilty or were convicted of crimes for the 2021Capitol siege.

What's unclear is if Jan. 6, 2021, was the anomaly, the year Americans violently attacked their own government, or if this year's expected calm becomes the outlier. The U.S. is struggling to cope with its political and cultural differences at a time when democracy worldwide is threatened. Trump calls Jan. 6, 2021, a "day of love."

"We should not be lulled into complacency," said Ian Bassin, executive director of the cross-ideological nonprofit Protect Democracy.

With pomp and tradition, the day unfolded as it has countless times before, with the arrival of ceremonial mahogany boxes filled with the electoral certificates from the states — boxes that staff were frantically grabbing and protecting as Trump's mob stormed the building four years ago.

Senators walked across the Capitol — which four years ago had filled with roaming rioters, some defecating and menacingly calling out for leaders, others engaging in hand-to-hand combat with police — to the House of Representatives to begin certifying the vote.

Harris presided over the counting, as is the Constitutional requirement for the vice president, and certify her own defeat — much the way Democrat Al Gore did in 2001 and Republican Richard Nixon in 1961.

She stood at the dais where then-Speaker Nancy Pelosi was abruptly rushed to safety last time as the mob closed in and lawmakers fumbled to put on gas masks and flee, and shots rang out as police killed Ashli Babbitt, a Trump supporter trying to climb through a broken glass door toward the chamber.

The House chaplain, Margaret Kibben, who delivered a prayer during the mayhem four years ago, gave a simple request as the chamber opened to "shine your light in the darkness."

There are new procedural rules in place in the aftermath of what happened four years ago, when Republicans parroting Trump's lie that the election was fraudulent challenged the results their own states had certified.

Under changes to the Electoral Count Act, it now requires one-fifth of lawmakers, instead of just one in each chamber, to raise any objections to election results. With security as tight as it is for the Super Bowl or the Olympics, law enforcement was on high alert for intruders. No tourists were allowed.

Gov. Tony Evers 'frustrated' MPS has yet to reinstate school resource officers

State law required the state's largest school district to do so a year ago.

Gov. Tony Evers said Milwaukee Public Schools (MPS) needs to comply with state law and reinstate school resource officers, a provision that was part of last year's shared revenue law that allowed Milwaukee to raise its sales tax.

"Yeah, I'm frustrated," Evers said during a briefing with reporters on Friday, January 3, 2025. "I'm frustrated especially that they've been working together with the city on the issue of police in schools. That's part of state law, and they have to obey the law."

The disagreement between MPS, the city and the police department is ongoing.

A spokesperson for MPS said in a statement Friday, "As MPS does not employ, hire, or train City of Milwaukee police officers, the district is waiting for the city to provide resources for the

A spokesperson for MPD said, "The city, including the Milwaukee Police Department, is operating in good faith in the discussions with MPS. Any questions related to the negotiations between the parties should be routed to their legal representatives."

State Republican leaders have said they will consider reducing future funding for the state's largest district if it doesn't comply.

"If you cannot put school resources officers back under the law, an awful lot of things we do for MPS have to be on the chopping block," Assembly Speaker Robin Vos said recently on "UPFRONT on WISN-TV 12."

Broadly, though, the governor said maintaining the decision on whether to use school resource officers lies with each district.

"That's a local decision to make," Evers said. "It's been successful. Some people, some school districts feel it hasn't been successful, but the fact of the matter is that MPS, as part of the last budget, needs to finalize that."

Being Frank

By: Frank James
Special to the Milwaukee Times

Time to see reality

It is the year 2025 - a new year with new opportunities for growth and success. Many people in the world will begin the year with fresh eyes and a new perspective. In 2025 African Americans need to adopt fresh eyes and use them to accept the truth of their existence. It is time for African Americans to see and embrace their reality; the USA does not need African Americans.

African Americans are extremely deluded about their importance to the overall success of the USA. For some reason, African Americans think that if they cease to exist the USA will collapse. The USA may collapse if African Americans became extinct, but not for the reasons African Americans believe. The US economy would take a major blow because no other ethnic group in the USA spends their money as wastefully as African Americans. The NBA may fail because African Americans do run down the court more than any other race in the organization. But overall, the USA would go on, and in probably better shape, without the modern African American.

"They need us. We created everything they have." The previous statement is one that everyone in the USA has heard in some form or fashion from African American people. The statement is half true. The majority of inventions, culture, even music came from African American people. In 2025 African Americans need to understand that even though they may have created everything – from the envelope to the traffic light – white people control the results. With this in mind, why do white people need African American people when they have taken the inventions? No one needs a person reminding them they stole and are getting rich from the theft. Since African Americans have adopted a culture that embraces stupidity, the creative gene that invented many products is being destroyed. Yes, the USA would function just fine without African Americans.

African Americans can't even lie and say the USA needs them for work purposes. African Americans used to be needed to do menial jobs and heavy labor. The USA doesn't need African Americans for these tasks. The influx of people coming from Mexico and other Spanish speaking-countries have cut out the need for African American labor across the board. Add in the fact that there is a growing number of African Americans who try to get rich rapping or on Tik Tok, rather than work a 9-to-5 job. Some states are paying for graduating high school students to go to trade school. Many African American students ignore the trades and seek undergraduate degrees in business or fashion design. How many chicken wing outlets and custom hoodie shops can the African American community support? Why would a person choose to come out of college $50,000 in debt when they can come out of trade school and make $100,000? Silly me. I forgot you can't pledge a Black Greek Organization if you go to a two-year school. Have to keep those canes twirling and pinkies in the air.

African Americans aren't even needed for sexual purposes in the USA. The obesity levels in both sexes have turned that option off. The exploitation of the African American female has dimmed her radiance and attraction. The lack of common sense and neutering of African American males has made him a shell of his former self. Fashion designers have manipulated African Americans of both sexes until neither knows who or what they are. Men carry man bags and wear tight jeans. African American women wear clothes that expose midriff bulge and give the illusion that they are going to the gym. Does the USA really need these people? If so, for what?

It is 2025, African Americans. Use the new year to look at your true status in the USA. You may be at the bottom, which is nothing new. The question is, what are you going to do to rise?

Northcott Neighborhood House hosts 4th annual 'Tis The Season Christmas Breakfast'

On Wednesday, December 25, 2024, Northcott Neighborhood House spent the morning serving meals and distributing toys to Milwaukee families, with a goal of providing more than 1,000 pre-cooked meals, at their 4th annual "Tis The Seasnon Christmas Breakfast."

Tony Kearney, executive director of Northcott, emphasized that giving back is a team effort—one that has been going strong for 29 years, creating lasting memories for both families and volunteers.

"We have about 300 individuals helping to wrap these thousands of gifts, so everybody pitched in to make it work," Kearney said. "It makes me feel great, especially when you see the kids' faces."

Four ways to keep your New Year's resolutions far into 2025

Three in ten Americans report making at least one resolution over the past year with half of the group making more than one, according to a Pew Research Center survey. However, after a few weeks into the new year, it's very likely that you may break a resolution, or two. That's because that same survey states that about six in ten adults who made at least one resolution (59 percent) say they kept all of them, while 28 percent say they have kept some of them. Another 13 percent say they have kept none of them.

Even though most people give up on their New Year's resolutions by the first week of February, the good thing to know is that this process can change.

By making simple changes in your mindset and the way you set your goals for the New Year, you can maintain resolutions and see a change that will last the entire year or longer.

Many people have an idea in their minds about what they would like to change over the next year but oftentimes, this idea is too generic and lacks enough detail to be executed thoroughly.

Take for example, the common goal of losing weight. Just stating that you want to lose weight is not enough.

Even stating the amount of weight you want to lose is not enough. You have to get detailed and plan out how you're actually going to lose the weight.

Pinpoint what triggers your weight gain and work to demolish those areas. If food is a large factor, decide which foods you need to eat less to lose weight.

If you need to work out more, write out exactly how many times a week you're going to work out and decide which exercises you will do during that time. Making a detailed plan decreases confusion when it's time to get to work and motivates you to get started on improving yourself.

Having someone check up on your progress keeps you on track to achieving your goals.

Knowing that a friend will call weekly to see how you're doing will help motivate you to stick to your goals.

Get a buddy to hold you accountable who is dedicated to seeing you grow and truly wants to help you during your process but be open to nosiness.

Be open and flexible to any changes that need to be made to your resolutions. You may get a new job that requires more of your time, but you really want to stick to your goals.

Be flexible enough to change the plan you made at the beginning of the year to fit your new circumstances.

Do not become frustrated and give up but adapt to new ways of reaching your goals.

You may become weary but keep working hard. Sometimes change requires the most consistent work so remember to keep working hard on the change you want to see in your life. Making these small changes to your New Year's resolutions can be the difference between this year and last year. Remember to stay focused and keep working hard.

Eight life-saving facts every brother should know about prostate cancer

Over 41,000 black men in the U.S. will discover that they have prostate cancer this year. In fact, about one in six will receive a diagnosis of the disease at a certain point in their life. Meanwhile, it affects one in eight Caucasian men.

In terms of death rates, the differences are substantial. Black men are two times more prone to die from the disease than other men. It's one of the greater racial disproportions witnessed in cancer.

However, don't let this scare you. BlackDoctor.Org is here to list eight life-saving facts every brother should know about prostate cancer.

1. Rectal exams are not required with prostate cancer screenings

Getting a prostate cancer screening does not necessarily mean you need a rectal exam. The purpose of the screening is to receive a blood test to figure out how much prostate-specific antigen (PSA) is found in your blood.

If your PSA level is considered abnormal, the next step is to do a magnetic residence imaging test (MRI) to help assess whether there are suspicious regions in the prostate that display cancer. An MRI is essential for determining whether to conduct a biopsy.

If you're being recommended for surgery, a rectal exam might give you more direction on treatment options. The exam can point your doctors toward the location of the abnormal areas within the prostate.

2. Earlier detection leads to more treatment alternatives

Prostate cancer is far easier to treat upon early detection, making screening imperative. The American Urological Association suggests that individuals with normal risk begin prostate cancer screenings once they turn 50.

It is recommended that you speak with your doctor during your 40s to find out if a prostate cancer screening is necessary before reaching age 50 depending on your risk level.

The earlier you tackle the problem, the more decisions you'll be granted. The longer you choose to wait and push it off, the slimmer those options become.

Treatment can differ based on the stage of diagnosis. Factors such as the severity of the cancer, your age, or other medical conditions are things to consider.

The goal is to work with your physician to be on the same page when it comes to picking a treatment, which sometimes requires several alternatives if the prostate cancer is intense.

3. An abnormal PSA test is not always an indication of prostate cancer

A PSA test is a blood test used to screen for prostate cancer, but its accuracy is not 100 percent. A PSA test can be abnormal for a handful of reasons besides prostate cancer.

One could be an enlarged prostate, a noncancerous, normal condition that affects men as they age. PSA tests are solely one aspect of the screening process in its entirety, and talking about this test with a urologist can be insightful.

4. Black men have a greater probability of prostate cancer

Research highlights that one in seven black men will get prostate cancer throughout their lifespan. Black American men are twice as prone to get diagnosed with prostate cancer and have a higher chance of being diagnosed with a more aggressive type of cancer. With that, screening is critical.

5. Family history amplifies possibility

If your dad, your brother, or another close relative has had prostate cancer, mention it to your doctor. They might tell you to get a screening earlier on because family history raises the likelihood of prostate cancer.

Overall, if you know you fall under the high-risk category, consult with your doctor about the pros and cons of annual rectal and PSA examinations.

6. Being asymptomatic still means you can have prostate cancer

Unless cancer has spread outside of the prostate, roughly 95 percent of cases don't have any symptoms. For early detection cases, it is usually a result of someone's PSA being elevated, so screening is extremely crucial.

7. The older you get, the greater prospect of prostate cancer increasing

After turning 65, your chance of prostate cancer skyrockets considerably. About six in 10 men who receive a diagnosis of prostate cancer are older than 65.

8. Physical health and lifestyle make a difference

Healthy lifestyle shifts can make all the difference in decreasing the likelihood of prostate cancer. Some of those modifications include, but are not limited to:

- Keeping a healthy weight
- Consuming less red meat and incorporating more green, leafy vegetables
- Working out consistently
- Cutting smoking
- Keeping stress levels to a minimum

While following healthy dietary guidelines, changing your lifestyle, and getting recommended screenings can lessen the risk of prostate cancer. If you are in the high-risk group, it is in your best interest to seek a trustworthy physician's care.

Use these tips for getting healthy – and staying healthy – during the cold winter months

Winter workout guidance from the American Heart Association

Many people think January is a great time to get a fresh start on a new fitness routine; while others use the cold weather as an excuse to huddle under the covers on the couch. No matter how you approach the new year, the American Heart Association has some important information about how to get healthy – and stay healthy – when the temperatures start to dip.

"There's actually some advantages to working out in cold weather. With no heat and humidity to deal with, you may be able to work out longer in cold weather; which means you can burn even more calories. It's also a great way to get much-needed vitamin D from the sunlight, which can help elevate your mood," said John A. Osborne, M.D., Ph.D., FACC, FNLA, Founder and Director State of the Heart Cardiology, Metroplex Cardiology. "Research shows that exercise also boosts your immunity during the cold and flu season."

Osborne said if you can't exercise outdoors, there are many online resources available to assist in developing a workout at home, or visit a gym or even walk the mall if you want to get out of the house.

If you are heading outdoors for exercise, try winter sports like skiing or skating. Or if you have to shovel your car out of a snow drift, Osborne has some warnings. Aside from some of the well-known cold weather dangers, such as frostbite or unsafe driving conditions, there are cardiovascular risks to consider. The cold causes blood vessels to contract and coronary arteries to constrict, which can raise blood pressure, increasing the risk of heart attack and stroke.

"Strenuous activities such as walking through heavy snow or snow shoveling can add stressors to the heart that people aren't normally used to," said Osborne "Our hearts also have to work extra hard in cold weather to keep a healthy body temperature."

Here are some tips to keep your heart in check during coat season:

1. Stay active safely: Make sure you wear layers to keep warm while exercising outdoors to avoid cold weather hazards like hypothermia, and frostbite and take breaks. It's important to stay active year-round but make sure you're not overexerting yourself in winter months. When in doubt, ask your doctor. Here are some tips on how to stay active in cold weather.

2. Stay hydrated: Just because it's cold and you may not feel thirsty, it's just as important to drink water like you would during a warm weather workout. Thirst isn't the best indicator that you need to drink; even if you aren't sweating as much, you still need to hydrate.

3. Watch out for the added calories in cold weather drinks: Comforting drinks like pumpkin spiced lattes and hot chocolate can be loaded with unwanted sugar and fat.

4. Get vaccinated: COVID-19 and the flu are especially dangerous for people with cardiovascular disease.

5. Learn CPR: EMS response times can be slower with inclement weather. More than 350,000 cardiac arrests happen outside of a hospital each ear. If administered immediately after cardiac arrest, CPR can double or triple a person's chance of survival.
