Alzheimer's Association-WI hosts 'Creating Connections: Hope Is Blossoming Through Care & Support'

Photos by Yvonne Kemp

On February 11, 2025, The Alzheimer's Association Wisconsin Health Equity Coalition hosted "Creating Connections: Hope is Blossoming Through Care & Support," at St. Mark AME Church, 1616 W. Atkinson Ave. Held in honor of Black History Month, the event addressed the critical health disparities affecting black Americans living with Alzheimer's and other forms of dementia.

The free event brought to light the concerning statistic that 21.3 percent of black Americans age 70 and older are living with Alzheimer's disease – a rate twice as high as their white counterparts. While researchers continue to investigate the underlying causes, the Alzheimer's Association is taking proactive steps to support the black community, as only 20 percent report having no barriers to excellent healthcare and support. Those who spoke at the event included Cream City Medical Society President and Marathon Healthcare Family Practitioner Kevin Izard, M.D.; Milwaukee County Executive David Crowley; and Cairasu Home Care Owner Fatou Ceesay. The event was organized by (top left photo) Alzheimer's Association Wisconsin Director of Health Equity Diane Milner; Alzheimer's AssociationExecutive Director David Grams; Alzheimer's Association Wisconsin Advocacy Committee Chair Fatou Ceesay; and St. Mark AME Church Senior Pastor Rev. Dr. Joy Gallmon. Also pictured are (middle photo) Health Equity Coalition including members Rev. On Tuesday, February 18, 2025, Wisconsinites casts their ballots in the February primary. There was one statewide race on the ballot, along with some local school board races and referendums; and some races throughout the state for city, town and village offices.

There were three people in the primary runing for state superintendent of public instruction. The incumbent, Jill Underly, was challenged by Brittany Kinser and Jeff Wright. The top two finalists, Underly and Kinser, will face off the spring general election on Tuesday, April 1, 2025. In Milwaukee, there was a special primary election for the city's 3rd Aldermanic District. Eight candidates ran to replace Alderperson Jonathan Brostoff, who died last year. The two finalists, who will face off on April 1, are Alex Brower and Daniel Bauman.

Milwaukee Co. judge gives MPS 10 more days to have cops in schools

Judge David Borowski ordered the district and city to split costs 50/50 for a school resource officer program and have officers in place within 10 days or face contempt of court.

A Milwaukee County judge did not hold back Monday, February 17, 2025, outraged over the Milwaukee Public Schools Board of School Directors missing another deadline to have resource officers back in schools.

"My order three weeks ago was not to negotiate further. It was to do it. It was to put the officers in the schools," Judge David Borowski said.

Borowski ordered the MPS board of school directors to have school resource officers in the schools, but the city and the board could not come to an agreement on an apportionment of costs.

"Why do you think you have the ability, legal, ethical, moral or otherwise, to ignore court orders? You don't," Borowski said.

"The gall and the temerity of, again, primarily the school board, but to the lesser degree, the city is breathtaking," Borowski said.

Monday's hearing was the latest chapter of a lawsuit brought by an MPS parent, who sued the school board because MPS has not re-instated resource officers in schools, as mandated by state law. Borowski gave MPS and the city a Feb. 17 deadline to comply with the law. When that didn't happen, attorneys for both sides showed up to court to explain why.

"The city has indicated it's not going to make the officers available to MPS until a financial arrangement has been reached," attorney Hanna Kolberg, representing the school board, said.

"Why is the city not giving them the resource officers, and why did they not do it 13 months ago?" Borowski asked the city attorney.

"The city is awaiting an agreement as to the apportionment of those costs," attorney Clint Muche, representing the city, said.

Borowski said the school board and city's explanations were not valid, nor lawful explanations for the continued violation of the law.

"None of that is good cause for why my order was not complied with," Borowski said.

Monday was just the most recent deadline the district has missed. Gov. Tony Evers signed Act 12 into law in the summer of 2023. It required MPS have 25 school resource officers by Jan. 1, 2024. Lawmakers did not specify who should pay, or how much.

"They left a huge gap in this law by not just saying what the apportionment should be. So I'm going to fill that gap today," Borowski said.

According to the MPS Office of Board Governance, the total cost comes out to $1,591,959, meaning the district and the city are each on the hook for $759,979.

"You know who's paying for this? It's not MPS. It sure as heck is not the school board. It is not the mayor. It is the taxpayers of the city of Milwaukee," Borowski said.

The MPS mother who filed the lawsuit, Charlene Abughrin, told WISN 12 News Monday's ruling is a win.

"He left them with no excuses on the table. None whatsoever. The next time we come back to court, they need to comply or they're going to be sanctions for them," Abughrin said.

Borowski said he wouldn't give the district additional time to train officers.

"I'm just not going to give MPS another out, another excuse to say, well, now we're going to need another month to find the officers to do the training. They can have the training be ongoing as they're in the schools," Borowski said.

There's another court date set for Feb. 27, where Borowski also ordered the president or vice president of the school board, and someone from the city, show up and be prepared to testify if the new deadline is not met.

"If they're not in the schools in the next ten days, I will set a hearing, and we will take up sanctions, contempt of court and the allocation of all actual costs to the plaintiff's attorney and to the plaintiff," Borowski said. "This ongoing violation of Act 12, this ongoing violation of state law, this ongoing violation, just flaunting of legal and court authority will end."

Black workers, black history

"Freedom is never granted; it is won. Justice is never given; it is exacted. Freedom and justice must be struggled for by the oppressed of all lands and races, and the struggle must be continuous, for freedom is never a final fact, but a continuing evolving process to higher and higher levels of human, social, economic, political and religious relationships."

–A. Philip Randolph

Every February, the Association for the Study of African American Life and History (ASALH), the organization established in 1915 by "the founder of black history," Dr. Carter G. Woodson, designates a theme for the observance of Black History Month. This year's theme is African Americans and Labor.

Dr. Woodson established the first "Negro History Week" 99 years ago this week, and as ASALH notes, the theme this year coincides with another anniversary: "2025 marks the 100-year anniversary of the creation of Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters and Maids by labor organizer and civil rights activist A. Philip Randolph, which was the first black union to receive a charter in the American Federation of Labor. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., Incorporated issues outlined by Randolph's March on Washington Movement such as economic justice into the Poor People's Campaign, which he established in 1967. For King, it was a priority for black people to be considered full citizens." Of course, that need for economic opportunity for black workers as a cornerstone for full citizenship was a centerpiece of the 1963 March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

As ASALH explains, highlighting African Americans and labor "focuses on the various and profound ways that work and working of all kinds – free and unfree, skilled and unskilled, vocational and voluntary – intersect with the collective experiences of black people. Indeed, work is at the very center of much of black history and culture. Be it the traditional agricultural labor of enslaved Africans that fed Low Country colonies, debates among black educators on the importance of vocational training, self-help strategies and entrepreneurship in black communities, or organized labor's role in fighting both economic and social injustice, black people's work has been transformational throughout the U.S., Africa, and the Diaspora . . . [T]he notion of work constitutes compensated labor in factories, the military, government agencies, office buildings, public service, and private homes. But it also includes the community building of social justice activists, voluntary workers serving others, and institution building in churches, community groups, and social clubs and organizations. In each of these instances, the work black people do and have done have been instrumental in shaping the lives, cultures, and histories of black people and the societies in which they live."

At a moment when black workers, along with women workers, immigrant workers, and so many others, are under implied and direct attack, this focus is prescient and timely. When A. Philip Randolph led the planning for the first proposed March on Washington in 1941 protesting segregation in defense jobs and the armed forces, the march was called off after President Franklin Roosevelt responded with the executive order banning discrimination in the defense industry, the first Presidential directive on race since Reconstruction. In the next administration, President Harry S. Truman responded to continued advocacy with the executive orders ordering the desegregation of the federal workforce and the military. The contrast to today is clear. Yet so is the inspiration that comes from studying history and knowing how generations before ours ensured we kept evolving, which is at the heart of all observances of Black History Month. As ASALH concludes their summary of this year's theme: "Like religion, social justice movements, and education, studying African Americans' labor and labor struggles are important organizing foci for new interpretations and reinterpretations of the black past, present, and future. Such new considerations and reconsiderations are even more significant as the historical forces of racial oppression gather new and renewed strength in the 21st century."

Remembering John A. Triggs

Sunrise:
August 16, 1939

Sunset:
February 5, 2025

John Triggs (1939-2025), born to sharecroppers in Canton, Mississippi, passed away on February 5, 2025. After moving to Milwaukee in 1955, he became the county's first African American wrestler and excelled in football. A dedicated member of Northwest SDA Church, John worked at Pabst Brewery until his retirement in the 1990s. He enjoyed fishing, cooking, traveling, and volunteering, where he met his wife Matrivee Webster-Triggs. John was preceded in death by his parents, former wife Cartha, three brothers, and sister. He is survived by his wife Matrivee, daughters Kimberlyn and Karla, six grandchildren and great-grandchildren, three sisters, and extended family. His legacy of faith, strength, and service will be remembered by all who knew him.

What is Every Day Counts?

- A 16-week lifestyle program for women living with metastatic breast cancer (cancer that has spread beyond the breast to other parts of the body i.e. brain, liver, bones).
- A program that provides tools for you to gain physical strength and support healthy eating.
- A study that will help us understand how diet and physical activity impact energy and quality of life.

HONORING BLACK HISTORY

Celebrating Black History All Month Long!

Five black female scientists everyone should know about

By: Grace Blackshaw

Scrolling through a list of famous scientists, it's pretty obvious science has a diversity problem. Galileo Galilei, Isaac Newton, Michael Faraday, Charles Darwin, Albert Einstein, Neils Bohr, Stephen Hawking – notice a pattern?

It's important to remember that not all scientists are white men – others just don't make it into our textbooks nearly as often as they should. Here are 10 black female scientists, engineers, mathematicians, and healthcare professionals everyone should know about.

Marie Maynard Daly

Marie Maynard Daly was an influential biochemist and the first black woman to earn a Ph.D., in chemistry in the US. Born in 1921, Daly completed her undergraduate degree at Queens College, her master's at New York University, and her Ph.D. at Columbia University. She then worked with Quentin Deming on arterial metabolism, exploring the links between high cholesterol, clogged arteries and increased risk of heart attacks. She also worked on protein synthesis and the chemistry of histones.

Patricia Bath

Patricia Bath is an inventor and ophthalmologist. Born in 1942, Bath grew up in Harlem, New York, studied Chemistry at Hunter College, and completed her medical training at Howard University. She then worked at the Harlem Hospital Center, focusing on finding treatments for blindness and other visual impairments. In 1988, Bath patented a probe that used a laser to quickly and painlessly remove cataracts. Bath also wrote about higher rates of blindness among African Americans and co-founded the American Institute for the Prevention of Blindness.

Shirley Ann Jackson

Shirley Ann Jackson is an influential American physicist. In 1964, Jackson started studying physics at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT); and in 1973, she completed her Ph.D., in nuclear physics, becoming the first black woman to earn a Ph.D., from MIT. As a postdoctoral researcher, she continued her work on subatomic particles, first at Fermilab in Illinois, and then at the European Organization for Nuclear Research in Switzerland. She also served as chair of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and has always been a passionate advocate for women and minorities in the sciences.

Alexa Canady

Alexa Canady was the first black female neurosurgeon in the US. She completed her bachelor's degree in zoology at the University of Michigan and stayed on to study medicine. In 1981, she completed her residency at the University of Minnesota and began specializing in pediatric neurosurgery. During her career, she saved and improved the lives of countless young people. She also carried out research on treating children with traumatic brain injuries and prenatal brain conditions.

Mae Carol Jemison

Best known as the first black woman to travel to space, Mae Carol Jemison is an American engineer, physician and astronaut. Born in 1956, Jemison graduated from Stanford University with a degree in chemical engineering and went on to study medicine at Cornell University. She then spent 2 years as a Peace Corps medical officer in Sierra Leone and Liberia. Upon her return to the US, Jemison changed career and, in 1987, was admitted to the NASA astronaut training program. On September 12, 1992, Jemison became the first black woman to travel to space, where she spent just under 8 days orbiting the earth.

Finally, while it's important to celebrate the incredible achievements of black female scientists such as these, it's also important to remember that the lack of diversity in science is a result of much more than just underreporting. White male scientists dominate more than just our textbooks. Globally, women account for less than 30 percent of all employees working in scientific research and development. In the US, black women make up 6.4 percent of the population but less than 2.5 percent of science and engineering employees.

We need to do more than just recognize the contributions of women and underrepresented minorities to the scientific community. We need to make it easier for others to follow in their footsteps.

Addressing stigma: Mental health conversations in black communities

*By RISE Drug Free MK*E

Mental health stigma within black communities remains an on-going challenge, deeply rooted with historical trauma and systemic mistrust. The history of discrimination, along with cultural and socioeconomic factors, has contributed to a silence around mental health issues. Yet, within this complex story, there is also a rich tradition of resilience and strength.

Breaking through the stigma

Breaking through this stigma requires intentional and often uncomfortable conversations. It is crucial to acknowledge historical barriers, while creating environments where seeking help is normalized and seen as a strength. Open, honest conversations about mental health can help dismantle misconceptions and foster a culture of support and understanding.

It's especially important to have these conversations with our young people. A recent report from the state of Wisconsin Office of Children's Mental Health found that overall, high school students are dealing with more anxiety, depression, and thoughts of suicide than they did ten years ago. What can help is being able to turn to a trusted adult who will listen without judgment and provide support. This is especially true of black youth, who are most likely of all students to say that an adult—not their friends—would be their best source of support.

Embracing mental wellness as a communal journey highlights the importance of this issue. By sharing experiences and resources, we show that mental health is a vital part of overall wellness. Together, we can build a future where mental health is openly embraced, and individuals are empowered to seek the support they need. This shift in focus enhances individual lives and strengthens our communities collectively.

By decreasing stigma and promoting healing, we honor our past while paving the way for a healthier, more supportive future.

Flu and stomach bugs are spreading fast—are you prepared?

Flu season is here, and with cases rising across the country, it's more important than ever to take steps to protect yourself and your loved ones. The flu can spread easily, causing mild to severe illness and, in some cases, serious complications.

Dr. Priya Soni, a pediatric infectious disease specialist at Cedars-Sinai Guerin Children's Health Center in Los Angeles, shares insights on what to expect this flu season and how to stay healthy amid circulating viruses.

What type of flu activity are doctors seeing this year, and what are the symptoms?

Flu season typically runs from October through March, with peak activity occurring in January and February. This year's flu activity is similar to last season, with cases steadily increasing across the country. Health officials are monitoring trends closely, especially as flu cases often surge alongside other respiratory illnesses like COVID-19 and respiratory syncytial virus (RSV).

The flu can strike suddenly, leaving people feeling exhausted and unwell for days. Symptoms of the flu include:

- High fever
- Chills
- Body aches
- Headache
- Fatigue
- Nasal congestion
- Sore throat

While many of these symptoms overlap with other respiratory viruses, the flu is known for its rapid onset and intense body aches that often make people feel significantly worse compared to a common cold.

Who is at higher risk for severe flu complications?

Certain groups of people are more vulnerable to severe flu complications, including:

- Young children, especially those under 5 years old
- Pregnant women
- Older adults, particularly those over 65
- Individuals with weakened immune systems
- People with chronic health conditions such as asthma, diabetes, heart disease, or lung disease

For these individuals, the flu can lead to serious complications such as pneumonia, hospitalization, and even death, making preventive measures crucial.

When should you see a doctor for the flu?

For most people, the flu can be managed at home with rest, fluids, and over-the-counter medications to ease symptoms. However, some cases require medical attention, especially if symptoms worsen or do not improve.

Seek medical care if you experience any of the following:

- A fever lasting more than three to five days (This could indicate a secondary infection.)
- Worsening cough or shortness of breath (This may be a sign of pneumonia.)
- Signs of dehydration (Symptoms include dizziness, dry mouth, or decreased urination.)
- A new fever after initial recovery (This could signal a bacterial infection, such as sinusitis or pneumonia.)

For high-risk individuals, antiviral medications like Tamiflu or Relenza may be prescribed to reduce the severity and duration of the illness. These medications work best when taken within the first 48 hours of symptoms, so early medical evaluation is essential.

Is it too late to get the flu vaccine?

Absolutely not! It's never too late to get vaccinated.

"The flu vaccine reduces the severity of illness and lowers the risk of complications, especially for high-risk individuals such as young children, pregnant women, the elderly, and those with chronic medical conditions," Soni said in a news release.

Each year's flu vaccine is designed to target the most common strains circulating at the time. While no vaccine is 100 percent effective, getting vaccinated can still lessen the severity of the illness and significantly reduce the risk of hospitalization.

Even if you've already had the flu this season, getting the flu shot can still be beneficial, as multiple strains of influenza circulate throughout the winter.

What is norovirus, and how is it spreading?

Aside from the flu, norovirus is another major concern during the winter months. Often called the "stomach flu" (though it's not actually related to influenza), norovirus is a highly contagious virus that causes:

- Nausea
- Vomiting
- Diarrhea
- Stomach cramps
- Occasionally, a low-grade fever

Norovirus spreads through contaminated food, water, surfaces, and close contact with infected individuals. It is one of the leading causes of foodborne illness and outbreaks frequently occur in schools, nursing homes, cruise ships, and other crowded environments.

Unlike the flu, norovirus symptoms usually appear 12 to 48 hours after exposure and resolve within one to three days. However, dehydration can be a concern, especially for young children and older adults.

What can people do to stay healthy during virus season?

To protect yourself from flu, norovirus, and other seasonal viruses, consider taking the following precautions:

- Wash your hands frequently – Proper hand hygiene is one of the best ways to prevent infection. Use soap and water for at least 20 seconds, especially after using the restroom, before eating, and after being in public places.
- Avoid touching your face – Viruses can enter the body through the eyes, nose, and mouth. Try to avoid touching your face, especially when out in public.
- Stay home when sick – If you're experiencing symptoms of the flu or norovirus, stay home to prevent spreading the illness to others.
- Disinfect frequently-touched surfaces – Norovirus and flu viruses can linger on surfaces, so disinfect high-touch areas like doorknobs, countertops, and shared electronics.
- Wear a mask in high-risk settings – "Wearing a mask is of utmost importance … to prevent the spread of respiratory infections in this critical time period during the winter," Soni said. This is particularly helpful in crowded indoor spaces and for individuals at high risk of complications.
- Cover coughs and sneezes – Use a tissue or your elbow to cover sneezes and coughs to prevent spreading germs.
- Get vaccinated – The flu vaccine remains the best defense against severe influenza-related complications. While it may not prevent the flu entirely, it reduces the risk of hospitalization and death.
- Stay hydrated and eat a healthy diet – Keeping your immune system strong with a balanced diet, plenty of water, and adequate sleep can help your body fight off infections more effectively.

Final thoughts

With flu season in full swing and norovirus outbreaks on the rise, taking preventative measures is more important than ever. Whether through getting vaccinated, practicing good hygiene, or staying mindful of symptoms, small actions can make a big difference in protecting yourself and those around you.

If you or a loved one develop severe flu symptoms, don't hesitate to seek medical care, especially if you're in a high-risk group.

Recipes for Meal Time

Cozy, Comforting Recipes to Take On the Cold

FAMILY FEATURES

If blustery conditions are giving you the blues, come inside from the cold for a winter warmup in the comfort of your own kitchen. Cold-weather favorites that are baked, roasted or slow cooked are usually equal parts easy, delicious and filling, making them perfect solutions for chilly, snowy days.

Add a bit of comfort to your weeknight menu with this Loaded Chicken Bake that's ready in about half an hour. A short list of ingredients and allowing your oven to do most of the work for you mean it's ideal for saving time (and money at the grocery store) while still satisfying winter appetites.

Serving as the hearty base is READ German Potato Salad, made with thinly sliced potatoes and bacon in a traditional sweet-piquant dressing. While it's delicious when served chilled, heated or at room temperature on its own, it can also be the star of the show in family meals.

For another true cent saver, try Oven-Roasted Sweet Potatoes and Beets. This savory side dish highlights the flavors of the season in a recipe that's as easy to assemble as it is to enjoy with loved ones.

Picked and packed at peak ripeness, antioxidant-rich Aunt Nellie's beets are pickled with a delicate balance of sweetness and vinegar for a homemade flavor that's perfect in this roasted side that can accompany winter meals of all sorts. Versatile jarred whole pickled beets are always in season, meaning you can enjoy them chilled, warmed or worked into recipes.

Loaded Chicken Bake

Recipe courtesy of Hungry In LA
Prep time: 20 minutes
Cook time: 15 minutes
Servings: 8

- Nonstick cooking spray
- 2 cans (15 ounces each) READ German Potato Salad
- 4 cups shredded rotisserie chicken or other cooked chicken
- 1/2 cup heavy cream
- 1/4 teaspoon salt
- 1/4 teaspoon finely ground black pepper
- 3/4 cup shredded sharp cheddar cheese
- 1/4 cups crumbled, cooked bacon
- French fried onions (optional), plus additional for serving (optional), divided

Preheat oven to 375 F.

Lightly coat 9-by-13-inch baking dish with nonstick cooking spray.

Spread German potato salad evenly in dish. Top evenly with chicken.

In small bowl, stir heavy cream, salt and pepper. Pour mixture over chicken.

Sprinkle with cheese, bacon and onions, if desired.

Bake 15 minutes, or until casserole is bubbly. Let stand 10 minutes. Top with additional onions, if desired.

Oven-Roasted Sweet Potatoes and Beets

Servings: 4

- 1 jar (16 ounces) Aunt Nellie's Whole Pickled Beets
- 2 large sweet potatoes (about 1 pound) peeled and cubed (1/2-3/4-inch cubes)
- 2-3 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil
- 1 teaspoon kosher salt
- 1/2 teaspoon black pepper
- 1 red onion, sliced about 1/4-inch thick
- 2 fresh rosemary sprigs, plus additional for garnish

Preheat oven to 400 F. Drain beets. Discard liquid or save for another use.

In large bowl, toss sweet potatoes, olive oil, salt, pepper and onion until coated.

Place silicone mat on baking sheet or line with aluminum foil.

Pour contents of bowl onto baking sheet in single layer. Remove rosemary from stems; sprinkle over vegetables. Bake 30 minutes until potatoes are almost tender.

Add beets to baking sheet. Return to oven 10-15 minutes, or until potatoes are fork-tender and beginning to brown. Garnish with additional rosemary, if desired.
